MOSCOW

A pretty wedding was solemnized at the Trinity church parsonage, Napanee, by Rev. Dr. Shorey, on Wednesday, October 26th, when Miss Mildred Ioah Clark, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Clark, Moscow, was united in matrimony to Mr. Geo. Scott, Strathcona. After the ceremony the happy couple motored to the home of the bride's parents where a sumptuous wedding banquet awaited them, several intimate friends being present to welcome them. Miss Clark is one of Moscow's most popular young ladies, always identified with the social life of the community, as well as the church choir and Sunday school. Mr. Scott happens to be one of the few young men from this county who volunteered his services for his king and country as early as 1914, the first year of the war, and was mentioned in despatches for conspicuous bravery on the field. The bride was the recipient of a number of beautiful presents, showing the high esteem in which she was held by her many friends. Mr. and Mrs. Scott will reside at Strathcona, where the groom is a prosperous farmer.

TO THE ELECTORS OF LENNOX AND ADDINGTON

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:

I have been asked in a very flattering manner, to contest the riding in the coming Dominion Elections in the interest of the existing government at Ottawa, which is under the leadership of Premier Meighen.

I hope and trust that all of you are interested enough in the issues of the day to take advantage of the rural mail delivery and obtain as much literature by way of newspapers and otherwise as possible. Every intelligent voter should form his own opinion as to what policy is best for the whole Dominion and every class of people in it. I am out to be your representative, not to represent myself, but to do what the majority of the people of the riding wish done in the interests of good government and the welfare of our fair Dominion.

In voting time me do not forget that you are supporting the principles of the Meighen Government, and voting against me, you are condemning the principles of protection, equality, and progress as set forth by Premier Meighen.

I will not be able to call upon you all personally, as the time is very short before election day, but I will do my best to set forth my views at public meetings, and would ask any of you who want to satisfy yourselves as to my views on any questions to make it your business to interview me.

I thank the public for the magnificent nomination you gave me at the largest convention ever held in the riding, and if elected will conscientiously and honestly carry out your wishes, and support the Meighen Government with an honest but independent vote.

I remain,

Your obedient servant,
A. B. CARSCALLEN.

A Witty Bishop.

When Bishop Stubbs, the English historian, was translated from Exeter to Oxford, he was received with open arms by many old and attached friends. After a luncheon at Christ Church, the bishop was walking with one of his archdeacons, and suddenly propounded this riddle, "Why am I like Homer?" The archdeacon "gave it up." "Because," replied the bishop with a heavy sigh, "I have suffered so grievously from translation."

To a curate who once offered to carry his bag he said—"You'll not find it heavy; it has not got my sermon in it." At Chester Cathedral, towards the close of a Christmastide service, the verger asked him, in very solemn tones, "Have you any further use for the mace, my lord?" "No. Take it away and put it in the pudding," said the bishop.

Reptiles are absent from the Arctic regions.

JUST FOR FISHERMAN.

"I'm sure I should never care for fishing. I haven't got the patience." How often you hear this remark and how hopeless it is to answer it!

The fact, of course, is, as Lord Grey says, that "patience" is not the quality required for fishing, but rather "self-control."

Anyhow, to those who love it—and they number nearly one in ten of the whole male population—fishing is by far the finest of all sports, and your true angler is not he who scorns all but game fish—that is trout and salmon—but the individual who will fish for perch in a pond for mackerel in the sea as keenly as for the noble salmon or the great leaping tarpon of the tropics.

Salmon fishing has a thrill which fences it above all other sports, but the salmon is the most uncertain of fish and, as in war, the quality required for success is persistence in the face of discouragement. Stated briefly and summed up, the chances in salmon fishing may be set down as follows:

Luck ..... 50 per cent.
Gillie ..... 20 per cent.
Flies and tackle ... 20 per cent.
Skill ..... 10 per cent.

So, at least, writes Sir George Aston, in "Mostly About Trout."

Fishermen are methodical people, and some keep a list of all the little odds and ends necessary to carry with one on a day's fishing. Spare cast and points, scissors, spring balance, a bit of rubber to straighten curly cut, matches, tobacco, pipe, etc.

One such list, written many years ago by an absent-minded fisherman, and mentioned by Sir George Aston, ends with this item—"Kiss Wife."

One thing the fisherman should never forget is to carefully grease his boots. This precaution not only keeps his feet dry, but save them also from chilblains.

If you can't get salmon or trout, like fishing is good sport, and the beauty of it is that the pike is in season in the winter during the close time for game fish. Playing a big pike is fierce work, and when you and him beware how you take your hook from his mouth! The pike's teeth are terribly sharp, and the strength of his jaw tremendous.

The best is on the other foot when the fish bites the fisherman.

Speaking of this sort of thing, I was once fishing from a boat on a Canadian lake, with a man who had never fished before. He hooked and brought up a mud fish, an ugly black brute of about four pounds. "Take care," I said, "let me unhook him for you." But my friend was too excited to listen.

Next moment there was a yell, and down he dropped in the bottom of the boat, his fingers streaming with blood from cuts made by the sharp teeth of the fish. In his fall, he knocked one of the rowlocks out of its socket, and of course this sank.

Next minute there was a crash of thunder, and a storm burst. With only one oar, we could not pull back against the wind, so were driven ignominously all across the lake. We reached the far shore, with our boat half full of water, and had to walk five miles home in torrents of rain.

The beauty of fishing is that you can fish all over the world, from the Yukon to the Amazon, from the Tamar to the Nile." And fishermen have taken their fish with them to the ends of the earth. Trout, rainbow trout, and salmon are now plentiful in New Zealand; there are trout in the rivers of the Cape, the mountain streams of Natal, and even in the Australian Alps.

Watercress Farm.

The largest watercress farm in the world is that at Enghien, near Paris. It covers forty-five acres of ground, and consists of a series of ditches, or cross-beds, running parallel. The ditches are about 225 feet long, four feet wide, and 18 inches deep. They are separated from each other by grass paths three feet wide.

RHEUMATISM?

Health is the Most Valuable Asset You Have. You cannot Afford to Neglect It

Crofton, B. C.—"I was troubled for years with inflammatory rheumatism and rheumatic fever. I tried several cures for rheumatism, but did not receive any benefit from any of them. I had been in the hospital for months, being unable to walk. A friend advised me to try Dr. Pierce's Anuric Tablets.

After taking the first bottle I began to improve, and after taking six bottles I had no more rheumatism. I think Dr. Pierce's Anuric is the most wonderful medicine that any one can take for rheumatism. I have recommended these tablets to several of my friends and they, too, have all been benefited by them."—Melville Collinson.

People are realising that the kidneys, just as do the bowels, need to be flushed occasionally. The kidneys are an eliminative organ and are constantly working, separating the poisonous matter from the blood. Uric acid backs up into the system, causing rheumatism, neuralgia, dropsy and many other serious disturbances.

This can be avoided by stimulating the kidneys to increased action, and because of its tonic effect on these organs any one would do well to get Dr. Pierce's Anuric Tablets which are to be had nowadays at almost any drug store or send 10c to Dr. Pierce's Laboratory in Bridgeburg, Ont., for trial package and write for free, confidential medical advice.

DEEPLY absorbed in the thrilling details of the plot, entirely oblivious to all his surroundings, this reader is following the developments of one of the best mystery stories yet penned by that star of fiction writers, George Barr McCutcheon. You will be equally interested in the new serial we take pleasure in announcing.

Sir William Sutherland,

Man Behind the Premier, Ramping British Empire

THE man who for years has guided the Lloyd George bootlicker is Sir William Sutherland, political secretary to the British Premier and Coalition Liberal Whip. Whenever the fiery Chancellor of the Exchequer entered the House of Commons to make a big speech he was always followed by a short pale-faced, reserved-looking man who sat immediately behind him with bundles of papers which were handed to his chief on request. Sutherland was born in Glasgow, 41 years ago, of a family of strong radicals, and early won distinction at Glasgow University. Standing high in the civil service examinations, he at once entered one of the best-paid clerkships and there helped Lloyd George, President of the Board of Trade, through some of his most important measures. It was Sutherland who mastered all the complicated details of insurance when the new Chancellor of the Exchequer produced his old age pension scheme.

During the war, Sutherland developed into a political manager. He was the link between Northcliffe and Lloyd George when Asquith was being pulled down. Then he became a member of Parliament and a knight and Parliamentary secretary to the new premier. He can make a good speech but seldom takes the floor. He is at No. 10 Downing street night as well as day. He goes on secret missions to kings and tells Lloyd George all the political gossip. His relaxation is a good cigar at the National Liberal Club after 11 p.m., when his day's work is done. He is very nimble of wit and untiring in industry. He is hated heartily by all who dislike the chief. He has few intimate friends, although he is always accessible. A Highland Celt, most of his friends are Irishmen.

That is a picture of the man so long behind the Lloyd George throne, whose salary is modest although his business, have sought his services, who lives simply and works hard and says little. The student became a useful secretary, then a good politician. Now he has evolved into a sort of deputy prime minister, or assistant general manager. If it is Sunday and some emergency arises in any department of Government and the responsible head is absent, then Sutherland orders the right thing done, and it is done.

Perhaps he is not a very British institution, but his power is real and his influence unquestioned. Perhaps even Lloyd George could not now destroy him. He may go much farther.

Trifling to Death.

One of Great Britain's largest manufacturers, Lord Leverhulme, asserts most persons shorten their lives by living in England than by hustling. He is a living proof that hustlers gain hale old age. He has always led the strenuous life and at 70 is still going strong, says the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

He presided at the annual meeting of the British Industrial Safety First Association in London the other day. In his address he drew largely upon his American experiences. Steps had been taken in America, he said, to ascertain whether it was the hustling, bustling business man who was supposed to shorten his days or the man who crawled and dawdled through life.

He declared there are men in the United States to-day of 80, 90 and between 90 and 100 years who are still in good health and actively engaged in business, whereas men who retired early from business had shortened their lives thereby.

He thought the crawl of the dawdler was largely instrumental in shortening the lives of individuals in Great Britain—that the more a man worked, whether professionally or in other vocations, the more he would conserve his life and strength and the life and commerce of the country.

Earthquakes In Britain.

In July there was a sharp earthquake shock in North Devon.

We are apt to imagine that the British Isles are safe from these unpleasant visitations, yet, if you take a map showing British earthquakes for the past thirty years, you will find very little country that has not been shaken during that period.

Durham is the only English county unaffected. In Scotland the only parts that have escaped earth tremors are the Orkneys, the Shetlands, and the Hebrides, and a part of the country south of a line joining Edinburg and Glasgow.

The whole of Wales felt the effects of the Hereford earthquake of 1896, and of the one centred at Carnarvon in 1903. The Hereford earthquake was one of the worst that has occurred in Great Britain. It is curious how often earthquakes are associated with hot weather. In 1756 the year opened with most unseasonable warmth, and on February 8th Londoners were awakened by a loud roaring sound and a sharp shock. A month later came two worse shocks which were felt as far north as Liverpool.

Names That Win Fame.

Certain surnames are prominent in the records of achievement. Take Napier, for instance. As soldiers, sailors, diplomats, and authors, men bearing this name have made history. The families of Wordsworth and Coleridge have contributed splendid talent to church, Bar, and literature.

Another name which shines is Scott. Of course, Sir Walter is the great Scott, but many of that name who bear no relationship to the author of Waverley have added lustre to the record of this famous surname.

But it is doubtful if any British name can beat the record of Russell. Lord John Russell was a distinguished Prime Minister; Lord Russell of Killowen was a great Chief Justice; Sir William Howard Russell was the greatest of war correspondents; G. W. E. Russell was a famous man of letters and a brilliant essayist; while there are many other well-known Russells to keep up the honor of the name.

PARLIAMENTARY LETTER

As election day draws nearer there is an increasing feeling of confidence of victory among Liberals in all parts of the Dominion, and a correspondingly lack of confidence among the Government party organizers. The people are realizing more and more every day that there is no hope of Mr. Meighen leading anything better than a group in the next House, and the same applying to Mr. Crerar, Canada is not betting on a losing horse, and therefore cannot afford to back either of these gentlemen in their efforts to get into power.

On the hustings Mr. King has convinced the people in all the cities he has visited that a Liberal administration is the only one to be entrusted with the country's future. Men of all shades of former opinion are realizing that the policy laid down by the Liberal leader is Canada's only hope of escaping from the "slough of despond" into which ten years of Tory bungling has plunged her, and that the policy of the Liberal leader is the only one which will ensure fair treatment to all men and all classes.

The cry, "it is time for a change" is being heard on all sides, and to that sentence is now being added the thought "it is time for a change to Liberalism."

Canada has suffered a distinct loss, as has Liberalism particularly, in the demise of Lady Laurier during the week. As the friend of labor by appointing of Sir Wilfrid in the time when his wise counsel was so sorely needed, at last was the country sorrowed at the death of the dear lady whose wise counsels and inspiring help meant so much to the Liberal standard during the half century of public life. Last week parties have been forgotten as a mark of respect to one whose political opinion have striven, by words and by other methods of expression, to show how deep was her sorrow at the loss of Canada's idol, and her going. Royalty and little children vied in attempting to express a regret so deep that mere words; a regret tempered only by the thought that the two great Liberals, who have been looked up to for half a century, are now undivided in death as they were in life. It is to be regretted that Lady Laurier could not have been spared for another month or so that she could again have seen the party of her illustrious husband in power.

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, the Liberal leader, travelled from St. Thomas, where he had been addressing a meeting on Thursday night, to Ottawa to attend Lady Laurier's funeral, and on Friday night returned to London where he had arranged to speak.

So great was the demand from the people of Ontario for a chance to hear the Liberal leader outline his policies that they would not listen to a suggestion that he forego one of the meetings to attend the funeral and return direct to London or St. Thomas later. So arrangements were made whereby Mr. King could reach Ottawa in time for the funeral and then return to London immediately afterward.

* * *

By his frank and fearless exposition of the problems of the day Mr. King continues to win friends for himself, and for Liberalism. In Ontario, as in the Maritime Provinces, he has laid down the principle of tariff revision in the interests of producers and consumers alike. While Mr. Meighen in Ontario and Mr. Crerar in Prince Edward Island have been having their own troubles with people in their audiences who questioned some of the extreme statements they made, the Liberal leader has gone along without an interruption. His capable denunciation of extravagances and double-shuffling on the part of the government and his exposures of the scandals behind Messrs. Meighen and Guthrie's latest shell purchases have made people stop and ask themselves what manner of government they had allowed to hold office during recent years and decide that Mr. Meighen's days in office are numbered.

Mr. James Murdock, formerly of the ill-fated Board of Commerce, and now Liberal candidate in South Toronto, has been talking out in Ontario and showing his hearers just how determined was Mr. Meighen's efforts to save his profiteering friends from any discomfiture.

The Borden-Meighen government had said, "keep your hands off our friends," and now Mr. Meighen is without an answer to Mr. Murdock's statements. Chosen as a member of that Board because he was a representative of Labor whom the labor men trusted as a "four-square upright man" Mr. Meighen is handing a jolt to the government, a jolt from the shoulder as he lays the facts calmly before the people, and because he is stating only what the government knows to be true, there is nothing in the semblance of an answer from Mr. Meighen or his satellites.

As another instance of the hopeless nature of Mr. Meighen's chances of returning to Ottawa as Premier, after December 6th, the opinion this week has been created to the spectacle of another Minister rushing to cover in the Senate. Sir Edward Kemp, the "Coin-pot" Knight from Toronto has sought seclusion, in the Upper Chamber and Sir Henry Drayton is like the young man in the song, who was "all dressed up with nowhere to go."

If someone can find a seat for Sir Henry where he won't be beaten they will have his thanks. He has coyly winked at several of the Government constituency organizations, such as for instance, Parkdale and Kingston, but there was no hope for him in either. Now it seems more than likely that he may be forced on the government supporters in Carleton County, though they don't want him. The county, in any case, gives a strong indication at the present time of swinging into the Liberal camp, since the people are not, as in 1917, being blinded by a lot of false flag-flapping.

The government is making a very belated attempt to pose as the friend of labor by appointing a railway man, Calvin Lawrence, to the vacant seat on the Railway Commission. But the move is too plainly apparent as a campaign bait to labor to be swallowed as the government hoped it would. It is also promising again to put a railway man on the Canadian National Board of Management, but the same two-year old promise of Sir Robert Borden has not yet been carried out, labor men will easily see how much chance there is of this one being fulfilled. The two are quite apparent an attempt to swing a few railway votes, which, however, are not showing any signs of being swung as the government hoped they would.

Next week will see the Liberal Chieftain started on his tour of the West. Another lie of the government's Ottawa propaganda bureau has been nailed since the announcement of Mr. King's itinerary. While the Meighen press agents sought to tell the people that Mr. King was "running away" from the fight in Ontario and the West, it is significant to note that after a series of most successful Ontario meetings Mr. King is about to start on a schedule which will take him to every important point from Winnipeg to Vancouver. He has a series of over twenty meetings in the west during the next three weeks, which gives the lie direct to the Meighen stories.

The final days of the campaign will be spent in a whirl wind drive of Ontario and Quebec cities where the Liberal leader will put the finishing touches to his campaign and make certain the victory. That it will be a victory on December 6th is certain from all indications to hand. All that is needed is for Liberals all over Canada to continue the good work they are now doing, and to leave nothing undone which will mean the bringing in of every last vote that can be secured for the Liberal candidates.

NORTHCLIFFE'S PET PAPER.

It Has a Circulation of 1,365,256 Copies Daily.

The most important achievement of Lord Northcliffe is the London Daily Mail, and, according to "The Mystery of the Daily Mail," a volume just issued by the Daily Mail, that is no mean achievement. The paper claims the world's largest circulation, 1,365,256 copies daily, and admits having revolutionized British daily journalism.

The then Alfred Harmsworth started the Daily Mail on May 4, 1896, on the assumption that the people of England wanted a more concise newspaper, one which would give a wide variety of news in handy form. The launch of which affairs was one radical innovation, but there were many others.

A beginning was made with the modest working capital of £15,000, much of which was expended between February and May in getting out private editions which were relentlessly criticized and improved until, after a solemn toast the first public edition was issued. All records were at once broken for sales and, says the Mystery of the Daily Mail, they have been broken daily ever since.

What is the mystery or secret of Northcliffe's success? The volume says: "People are not so foolish as not to realize that the average 'Dot' journal is conducted with the object of gaining some social reward for its owners. At a time when millionaires of all sorts are trying to buy, and have bought, public opinion by getting possession of newspapers, the existence of an independent publication like the Daily Mail, which is just as independent of politicians as of advertisers and of readers, is an essential part of the body politic."

The ability to utter something like the last sentence without smiling or causing others to smile is, to me the mystery, the secret of 1,365,256 copies of a big advertising revenue and of Lord Northcliffe, formerly Alfred Harmsworth, who accepted a peerage without giving in return any support to the Government.

Many British Monarchs Have Been Short of Cash.

How They Raised the Wind

Until the last week or so few people realized that even kings could be hard up. Yet this has often been the case, for kings are put to enormous expenses in maintaining the dignity of their position.

In his private life a king may economize as much as he likes; but in his public capacity he cannot do so.

The King of England, for instance, sums up in his person the whole British Empire, and if he were to make a state function, such as the opening of Parliament, a cheap and tawdry affair, then the Empire should lose prestige with the rest of the world.

Even republics realize how essential it is for the head of the state to perform his public duties with a certain amount of pomp. France, for example, allows her President no less than $250,000 a year.

England has always kept its sovereigns rather short of money.

King John, we know, pawned his crown. Bluff King Hal would have been quite "on the rocks" if he had not conceived the brilliant idea of transferring some of the revenues of monks to his own coffers.

Good Queen Bess had an even more brilliant plan. When she was hard up, she simply went and stayed with her richest subjects, who paid the expenses of the royal progress through the country, and sent her away loaded with presents.

James I. raised the wind by inventing the title of baronet and selling baronetcies at $5,000 a piece. The other Stuart kings obtained money by forced loans, and even by selling the crown jewels.

All England's monarchs after this were economical and businesslike, but the allowances given to them were insufficient for their necessary expenses.

As a thrifty housewife, good Queen Anne, mother of eighteen children, and a model of all domestic virtues, was not very successful. She ran into debt to the tune of $5,000,000. Her allowance was about a million a year, out of which she had to provide pensions and pay the entire Civil Service, the judges, and several Government departments. Such a sum would not run England now for more than half a day!

In spite of the enormous increase in the cost of living which has occurred since the early days of his grandmother's reign, King George receives only about twenty per cent. more than she did. His allowance is the same as his father's.

So splendid were the results of the King's economics during the war that no less than $500,000 was saved, every shilling of which went to help the funds for disabled service men.

The last two years have been a severe struggle; wages have risen and materials have increased enormously in cost, whilst the royal income has decreased. In spite of the most rigid economy, the King finds that he cannot live within his income. He has refused to take another penny from Parliament, and is selling some of his property to help him to tide over—a very noble sacrifice, for it means reducing his income by $25,000 a year.

Though our Empire is so vast, we do not make a big grant to our King, who receives considerably less than the King of Italy.

Before the war, Germany gave the ex-kaiser half as much again; the Austrian emperor's grant was double that of King George, whilst the Czar of Russia received more than eight times as much.

How many people realize that England's contribution to the King and the Prince of Wales is less than five cents per head in the year?

Welsh Superstitions.

Superstitions of the country folk of Wales are discussed in the quarterly report of Dr. Arthur Hughes, medical health officer of the county of Carmarthenshire. Despite the fact that fortune telling and witchcraft are prohibited under the English law, large numbers of the Welsh peasants bring their ailing children to the witch doctors rather than to medical practitioners. One fetish that appeals to these superstitious people is that a witch doctor can cure a child of backwardness by means of making a slight incision in the cartilage of the child's ear. The operation must be performed during the waxing of the moon and the art is handed down from generation to generation, the "doctor" usually being a woman. If a cure does not result the operation is repeated, until the child is cured. It is said that many women practice this art and that the people pay large sums to have dull children so treated.

THIS WOMAN'S RECOVERY

Shows Remarkable Restorative Power of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Chesley, Ont.—"Before using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I was a total wreck. I had terrible pains in my sides and was not regular. Finally I got so weak I could not go up stairs without stopping to rest half way up the steps. I tried two doctors but they did me no good. I saw your medicine advertised in the newspapers and thought I would give it a trial. I took four bottles of the Vegetable Compound and was restored to health. I am married, am the mother of two children, and do all my housework, milk eight cows, and do a hired man's work and enjoy the best of health. I also found Vegetable Compound a great help for my weak back before my babies were born. I recommend it to all my friends who are in need of medicine, and you may print this letter if you wish."—Mrs. Henry Janke, R. R. No. 4, Chesley, Ontario.

It hardly seems possible that there is a woman in this country who will continue to suffer without giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial after all the evidence that is continually being published, proving beyond contradiction that this grand old medicine has relieved more suffering among women than any other medicine in the world.

The Cocktail In England.

Some weeks ago the statistics were published that drunkenness was on the increase in Great Britain. There were several explanations—the most likely being that more cases were recorded than formerly. But, at last, the mystery is solved. We should have known that America was at the bottom of it; if not as the source of prohibition—then somehow else.

A recent despatch from London says: The cocktail habit is getting a strong grip on Britain. There's not the slightest doubt about it. The distillers are delighted, the hotel and bar men are delighted, the brewers are not quite so much so, and the prohibitionist are frothing at the mouth.

There are units of the British press which say that though America gave much in the war through supplying troops, food, ammunition, and Ford cars, she has given more in peace through contributing the cocktail.

There are other units of the British press which solemnly declare that the United States at divers times has grievously offended England by her arrogance and her new-richness, by her inferior production and her invention of divorce, but that now she has capped the climax by inflicting quite the greatest harm that any other nation ever has done Britain through foisting on the British public, and especially the British female public, the deleterious, insidious, mind-stealing, character-wrecking, muscle-destroying cocktail.

OLD NATION REBORN.

British Will Hold Mandate Over "Garden of Eden."

Lifting out of the mists of antiquity and taking shape in tangible form, the Garden of Eden is about to take its place in the geographies under the flame of the Kingdom of Irak, and it will function under a British mandate. After ages of idleness this garden spot of all the world, from which the human race is supposed to have sprung, is again going to be an integral part in the economic progress of Mother Earth.

The new kingdom, or rather the oldest of kingdoms garbed in a cutaway coat, stripped trousers, boots and spats and topped by a stiff hat, will take the place once occupied by Babylon in robes of gleaming silk and bedecked with gold and gems of price. It is situated in the fertile plain between the Tigris and Euphrates, which is now about half bog and half desert waste, but which was once a garden that bloomed and fruited as no other spot on earth.

An appreciation of the possibilities of this territory may be obtained by a study of the past. In the beginning of history this plain was the home of a rich, cultured people whose wealth and comfort depended entirely upon the intricate system of canals which crossed the region between the two rivers. Remains of these old waterways may yet be traced across arid wastes or through inaccessible bogs.

But ever and always to the north and east dwelt menace, the turbulent hill people who looked with longing eyes on the fertile fields and easy lives of the dwellers in the man-made paradise. For centuries civilization had a bulwark of soldiers, a sort of armored dike, between it and the horde of barbarians, but finally the Parthians pierced the wall and then overran the country. They were followed by the Persians, and under the less-civilized rulers the canals that were the secret of the land's wealth were allowed to fall into disrepair, but the process of disintegration was slow and under the Abbassid Caliphs, a combination of Arabic and Persian culture, Bagdad was founded in the center of the river plain and for a time it was the metropolis of the world, with a population of 2,000,000. Gay, wicked, splendid in its shame and glorious in its excesses, the city throve for a time.

Canal walls crumbled, desert lands crept down and reclaimed their own, the waters of the river, left to follow their own courses, crept across the fertile acres, turning them into bogs, until now much of the incomparably fertile soil is lost. In 1908 some reclamation work was done and since 1917, when the British occupied Bagdad, this work has been carried forward much more rapidly until now an appreciable acreage has again been made productive.

The Vital Issue

"What we have to decide is this—Are we going to continue the protective system of this country or are we not? That is the question and that is the whole question. And the great, big, necessary thing is that every voter in this country from the Yukon to Halifax knows that this is the question he or she is deciding when he or she votes in this great contest."

—ARTHUR MEIGHEN

THE vital issue in the coming election—in fact, the only issue—is the Tariff, and to every clear thinking Canadian it should be readily apparent that a Protective Fiscal Policy is absolutely essential to stability, progress and development.

Every important country in the world upholds Protection as an essential economic principle. Even Great Britain—so long the stronghold of Free Trade—has now adopted laws that constitute Protection of the most effective kind. In fact, the present policy among most nations is towards raising their tariff walls, not lowering them. In the face of these facts it would be suicidal for Canada to do exactly the reverse and discard the fiscal system which has been responsible for its progress during the past forty-three years.

Free Trade would mean death to Canadian Industry. It would also result in the immediate closing down of Canadian plants of foreign firms, with consequent additional unemployment. There are to-day 650 American factories alone in Canada. Similar proposed ventures would be abandoned. New capital would refuse to come to a Country lacking adequate protection and present industrial enterprise would be promptly strangled by foreign competition.

The preservation of the home market by a Reasonable Protective Tariff is vital to both city dweller and agrarian alike—now as never before. More capital is urgently needed for the development of Canada's enormous resources, which will result in a lessening of unemployment and an increased population. More work and more workers will produce an enlarged home market for products of both city and farm, and the exodus of Canadian men and women—and the dollars they earn—will be precluded.

The United States has slammed her trade door in the face of Canadian farmers by adopting the Fordney Bill, and the farmer is consequently now even more dependent upon the home market than in the past.

Yet Crerar asks you to destroy that home market by voting for Free Trade.

King's policy—if he has one—will result in the destruction of the Tariff.

Meighen stands four square for Reasonable Protection—Protection for all the people—and asks for an overwhelming mandate to give both industry and agriculture that assurance which will spell prosperity for all. Individual prosperity depends upon National prosperity. Your personal interests and Canada's very existence hang upon your vote.

Waterworks Pump House Burned.

On Thursday afternoon last fire badly damaged the waterworks pump house at the foot of East street. The fire originated from an accidental leak in the supply tank of the new gasoline pump, which was being tested after some changes had been made by a mechanic sent by the engine makers. The gasoline took fire and in a few minutes the floor and roof were burning fiercely. The firemen sponded quickly and by strenuous efforts for a short time kept the fire down, though the leaking gasoline continued to burn until the large tank in front of the power house ran dry. The roof of the main building was destroyed, also the floor, windows and door frames badly charred. The roof of the boiler room, in which are also the gas and steam pumps, was also badly charred. The steam pump and boiler, although somewhat damaged were put into commission a few hours after the fire was put out. The damage to the gasoline engine will amount to probably $500. The insurance companies interested have allowed $750.00 for damage to the steam pump and boiler and will bear the expense of shipping the gasoline pump back to the factory and replacing it after repairs have been made. The new water pump, which is being installed, was not in any way damaged. Already the pump house is being got ready for its new roof. The remains of the old roof have been cleared away and the walls torn down to the level of the new roof, which will be of cement with steel girders, making the building fireproof. The old window frames are also being torn out to be replaced with steel sash. The fire has caused some delay in starting the new water pump, but connections will be completed in a couple of days and the pump put in commission.

A GOOD SUGGESTION

Dear Sir :—

I am hoping that it will see on a hill board a request for union services to be held in some church on the morning of Armistice Day.

It would certainly be in order for prayer and praise on that memorable day.

Union services on Thanksgiving, Christmas and Good Friday, are to my mind the proper thing for christian people ; and I am hoping and praying that a Watch Night Service will be held in the churches throughout our land on Sunday night, January 1st, to plead for a revival, and that we may all get into the right relationship with "Our Father."

A BIBLE LOVER.

The Late John M. Wallace.

Mr. John M. Wallace, one of Napanee's oldest residents, was suddenly stricken in the Napanee post office on Tuesday evening of last week, and passed away while being removed to his home. On Monday he celebrated his seventy-eighth birthday at the home of his daughter, Mrs. E. J. Roy, where he has been living during the past two years since the death of his wife. The funeral took place on Thursday afternoon to the Church of St. Mary Magdalene, where Rev. J. H. H. Coleman conducted the funeral services. The Masonic Order attended the services in a body and conducted their service. Two sons, Messrs. J. B. Wallace, Meaford ; and T. H. Wallace, Napanee ; and one daughter, Mrs. E. J. Roy, are left. The remains were taken to Riverside cemetery, of which Mr. Wallace has for some years been president, and in the improvement of which Mr. Wallace has taken a great interest.

IN ARCTIC SEAS.

Toronto Man With Stefansson to Explore Vast New Areas.

Stefansson's next Arctic expedition, of which the advance scientific party is to be headed by Allan R. Crawford, of Toronto, is to undertake a vaster work than any of the great Canadian's previous efforts.

"This will be my fourth expedition, and I expect to explore an area estimated at 1,000,000 square miles lying between the polar regions and Siberia and the polar coast of Alaska," said Stefansson, outlining his plans as so far completed.

The advance party is on its way to Nome, Alaska, which will serve as outfitting base. Thence with dogs and full Arctic equipment added to the scientific and other supplies brought up from Seattle, the party will proceed on the schooner Orion to one of the Canadian islands in the Arctic. During the winter they will make scientific observations and commence laying in supplies of food, fuel and clothing for the main party, which proceeds north next summer.

The goal of the whole expedition is a vast unexplored area in the ice-choked Arctic seas north of Behring Strait and spreading fanwise east and west, in a region where ships and dogs have never taken man.

"I feel again the lure of the Arctic wastes, the most awe-inspiring region on the face of the earth," said Vilhjalmur Stefanson, the great, blond Norse-Canadian, smiling, as questioned by a recent interviewer. "I am tired of writing and lecturing on what has been accomplished and am anxious to do some real work for civilization.

"Perhaps the new field will be mostly water, deep ocean, but I am confident that I will find some land, island on which the foot of man has never trod. I expect to find at least one island half as large as old Manitoba, my home province. But I will not linger in any one portion of the new area, but cover it all in a systematic manner.

"It has been suggested that I use aeroplanes during this journey of the Arctic, but I have come to the conclusion that only a superficial investigation could be made in this way, one of little value compared to one made during a journey by dog team. I have traveled 10,000 miles in the Arctic without seeing a human being, and in all that distance never lost a dog from hunger.

"To a considerable degree we will travel like tramps, foraging as we go, just as Mackenzie explored Canada, or Alexander invaded Asia. This will ease the dogs of unnecessary burden. Our advance party will leave their base at one of the Canadian islands next spring and advance farther inland, securing dried meat and curing skins as they go. I will leave Seattle in July, 1922, to trail them."

In 1906-7 Stefansson was a member of a party of explorers headed by Ernest de Koven Leffington, an American, and Ejar Mikkelsen, a Dane. As a result of the wreck of their ship, the Duchess of Bedford, he became separated from the expedition and spent a winter in the Arctic as the guest of the Eskimo tribes.

"My experience then taught me that the natives of the Far North have an easy time making a living, and a white man may be comfortable and healthy in the Arctic," said the explorer. "On subsequent trips I learned to rely more and more on the country for a living, and this time I will continue to profit by my experience. During the Canadian Arctic exploration of 1913-1918, we discovered several new islands, the largest of which was 150 miles in diameter, and traveled many thousands of miles in a previously unexplored area without losing a dog or even missing a meal."

Mr. Crawford's advance party will follow a stipulated route so that the major expedition will have no difficulty in finding them. Three young American university men, specialists in scientific subjects, will accompany the young Toronto man, who is a student at the University of Toronto, the son of a professor and only twenty years of age.

Squeezed Through Jail Bars.

MONTREAL, Nov. 7.—Despite the fact that he was under medical treatment in the cells, Guy Pierce, who was being held on a charge of having drugs in his possession, squeezed through the bars of the window of the cells at Headquarters Station on the City Hall Annex, and made his escape. The window is nearly 20 feet from the floor. Owing to his physical condition, it was not thought possible that Pierce could effect an escape.

Cost of Strike.

LONDON, Nov. 7.—Supplementary estimates issued Friday include nearly £7,000,000 for army expenditure occasioned through the coal strike.

Other supplementary items were £10,000 for the interment in Australia of Germans and Austrians resident in Tanganyika, formerly German East Africa, and £100,000 for Russian famine relief, consisting chiefly of medical stores handed to the Red Cross.

KEMP ENTERS SENATE

Calvin Knapsack Was Appointed to Railway Commission.

OTTAWA, Nov. 7.—Hon. Arthur Meighen signalled his return to Ottawa by calling a Cabinet meeting, at which it was decided to appoint Sir Edward Kemp to the Senatorship left vacant by the death of Senator Frederic Nicholls of Toronto. This was an expected appointment, although Sir Edward was to have stood for East Toronto in the Government's interest, and stated lately that he had given no thought to the possibility of a place in the Senate.

His fellow-Ministers, however, gave considerable thought to it, and, as a result, another Minister is raised above the caprice of the stock. It is understood he will remain Minister without portfolio.

Another appointment made was the elevation of Calvin Lawrence, legislative representative at Ottawa of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, as a member of the Railway Commission, to take the place of the late A. S. Goodeve. Mr. Lawrence has been a more faithful attendant of Parliamentary sessions than many of the members, in the interest of his brotherhood. He was formerly a locomotive engineer on the Ontario division of the Michigan Central Railway, and lived in St. Thomas.

Three Senatorial vacancies are left to fill—one in Nova Scotia, for which Peter Martin, ex-M.P. for Halifax, is stated to have a good chance; one in New Brunswick, for which Col. F. B. Black is spoken of, and one in British Columbia, for either Herb Clements or Col. "Cy" Peck. The latter is running as an Independent candidate and Clements as a Government candidate. This may complicate matters a little.

SOLDIERS WILL VOTE.

Veterans to Decide on Disposal of Canteen Funds.

OTTAWA, Nov. 7.—Voting of returned soldiers to determine the disposal of the army canteen funds, being held this week by the Government, will commence November 15 and conclude February 1, it was announced by Major N. F. Parkinson, Deputy Minister of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment. The questions on which ex-service men and women will vote will be decided by a special committee composed of Major Parkinson, Col. J. W. Margeson, chairman of the Pension Commission; T. Cox, of the assigned pay branch; W. P. Grant, Hawa business man; C. G. Macneil, Dominion Secretary, G.W.V.A.; J. F. Marsh, Toronto, representing Grand Army United Veterans; H. Colborne, Montreal, representing Army and Navy Veterans. The ballots will be issued in the form of postcards, and will be made available to all concerned at all post offices, and at the offices of the D.S.C.R.

Expenditure in connection with the referendum will be charged against the demobilization appropriation and not against the canteen funds.

BRIBERY DISCOURAGED.

Stiff Sentence Was Handed Out to Foreigners.

HAMILTON, Ont., Nov. 7.—Terms of two years and six months penitentiary were imposed by Judge Gauld on Peter Senenuk and Anisey Sawastiniuk, who were convicted of attempting to obstruct the course of justice by attempting to bribe Antonia Kowlaski. His honor, in passing sentence, said he would make an example of such offenders. In the case before him, the crown had satisfied him as to the guil. of the prisoners, despite the fact that the charge was always a hard one to prove.

On the grounds that they were foreigners and did not know the laws of Canada, T. R. Sloan asked for suspended sentence.

"There has been too much of this going on," remarked his honor, in announcing a two-year term. The case arose out of a theft charge. The prisoners offered Kowlaski $25 to swear that a friend of theirs did not commit the theft referred to, which took place in Thorold.

Killed by Chum.

NORTH BAY, Ont., Nov. 7.—Five hours after he was shot by Joseph Giroux, 20 years old, at Activille, 12 miles east of here on the C.N.R. Homer Callahan, 14 years of age, son of the section foreman here, died from hemorrhage and shock.

On his way to the village Thursday morning the boy saw two deer, and returned to bring Giroux, who had a gun. The latter, on sighting the animals, became excited, and was raising his gun to take aim, when the weapon prematurely discharged, Callahan receiving the shot in the thigh.

Coroner Dr. Ranny and Crown Attorney McKee, went from here and conducted the inquest, at which a verdict of accidental death was returned.

Organizer Flogged.

MOBILE, Ala., Nov. 7.—John E. Vinstanley, organizer employed by the American Federation of Labor, is in a hospital at Sherman, Florida, suffering from injuries received when he was tied to a tree and flogged at Sherman, Florida, according to word received here.

Winstanley was en route from Mobile to Panama City, Florida, where he intended to assist in settlement of some labor trouble. He was met by six men at Sherman, taken from the train and tied to a tree and whipped. He was picked up unconscious and sent to a hospital at Marianna.

HALL'S CATARRH MEDICINE

Those who are in a "run down" condition will notice that Catarrh bothers them much more than when they are in good health. This fact proves that while Catarrh is a local disease it is greatly influenced by constitutional conditions. HALL'S CATARRH MEDICINE is a Tonic and Blood Purifier, and acts through the blood upon the mucous surfaces of the body, thus reducing the inflammation and restoring normal conditions.

Premier Hara of Japan Stabbed by Assassin.

Wound In Breast Proved Fatal In Less Than an Hour—Crime Took Place In Railroad Station at Tokio—Notable Career of Prime Minister, Who Came Into Power In 1918.

He died an hour later. The assassin, who is nineteen years old and demented, was arrested.

The post of Premier of Japan, made vacant by the assassination of Hara, will be assumed by the Finance Minister, Korekiyo Takahashi.

The assassination of Premier Hara comes at a dramatic moment, when the Japanese delegation is assembling for the Washington conference, and when Japan is intensely interested in the international issues in which Premier Hara has until now taken such an important part. He had been urged to head the delegation to Washington and, for a time, had the matter under consideration, but finally decided that his services would be better employed at home during the discussions at Washington.

Takashi Hara has been Premier of Japan since 1918, when he formed a Cabinet after the fall of the Terauchi Ministry, the Siegu-Kai party, of which he was a leader, taking control. The position of the Premier and his party was confirmed by the general election in May, 1920, that party securing a great majority.

The Premier has had a long and distinguished political career. Born in 1854, he was for some time in the Foreign Office service both at home and abroad, and was vice-Minister for a time in 1895. He joined with the late Prince Ito in organizing the Seiyu-Kai party in 1900, and shortly afterwards became Minister of Communications in the Cabinet. Later he served again as head of that department of the Government in the Seiyu-Kai Cabinet of 1906-08, resigning with the fall of that Ministry, and traveling to Europe and America in the latter part of 1908 and 1909.

M. Hara re-entered the Cabinet in 1915 as Minister of Home Affairs, and in 1918 formed the Cabinet now in office.

MOTHER BRINGS WREATH.

British Woman to Honor American Unknown Warrior.

QUEBEC, Nov. 7.—The Canadian Pacific liner Metagama arrived here from Liverpool Friday evening with 549 passengers on board. Among the cabin passengers was Mrs. Amelia Emma McCrudden, the British War Mother, who is on her way to the United States to deposit a wreath in the name of the British people on the grave of the unknown American soldier in Arlington Cemetery at Washington. She was met here on the arrival of the steamer by Mrs. Blanche A. Bellak, president of the Philadelphia Chapter of the American War Mothers to the British War Mother, who lost three sons and other relatives in the great war. Mrs. McCrudden is accompanied by Capt. M. Stevens, florist to the Prince of Wales, who is in charge of the wreath of flowers which Mrs. McCrudden will place on the grave of the unknown American soldier.

Thieves Were Shot.

MOSCOW, Nov. 7.—Nineteen men have been shot and forty men and women sentenced to prison terms, after conviction before a Moscow court-martial, for thefts of diamonds, platinum and old silver and jewelry from the Government stores.

These stocks were taken over by the Soviet from shops and individuals at the beginning of the Bolshevik regime.

Chief Inspector of the State Control Commissariat, M. Aventikyanz, who has been executed, was convicted of stealing fifty million roubles worth of gems and precious metals.

France Gets Money.

JARIS, Nov. 7.—The maximum amount of reparations, which France can hope to receive from Germany, is placed at sixty-eight billion gold marks, or about $1 per cent. of the damage suffered, in the outline of the 1922 budget presented to the chamber by M. Bokanowski, reporter of the Budget Committee.

The anticipated expenditures of the Government for 1922 have been reduced to 24,953,000,000 francs, with receipts of 23,327,000,000 francs, the deficit of 1,626,000,000 francs to be covered by an issue of treasury bonds.

COMES WITH OPEN MIND

Problems of Japan and the Pacific Ocean are Going to Be the Most Difficult to Solve, But the Japanese Are Likely to Modify Present Policy of Expansion — Former Premier Balfour to Speak for the British Empire.

LONDON, Nov. 7.—Whatever role Britain may eventually attempt to play in the Washington Conference, she sets herself none in particular at the outset. There is a nation-wide disappointment that Premier Lloyd George is unable to be present at the start, because it is believed no one could better elucidate the British point of view in the earlier stages of the deliberations of countries new to a favorable atmosphere in the first days than the Premier himself.

His responsibilities now devolve upon the veteran Balfour, supported by Lord Lee and Sir Auckland Geddes. The British point of view, as the nation's representatives enter the Washington parley, is that limitation of armaments depends on the results achieved after full consideration of all the important Pacific problems.

It is held here that, with its increasing population, Japan will be driven to find outlets for its surplus millions, but finds the shutters up in Australia and New Zealand to the Chinese, and the United States and Canada to the east, while on the west any peculiar rights which she believes are hers are protested. Behind the Japanese mind to realise that in recent months there has been an ever-growing body of opinion in this country which, while not prepared to recognize Japan should have some outlet for her overflowing population, dislikes her present policy of expansion.

It is believed, in the informed quarters that Japan, recognizing dangers lying in the further prosecution of this policy, is now in a mood to supplant it by the method of pacific penetration, in the belief that some understanding with the United States may be reached at Washington on such a basis. The sanguine attitude of the British Government toward the outcome of the Washington Conference is thought here to be largely ascribable to a foreknowledge of some such change in Japan's plans.

What accentuates this confidence in the outcome of the deliberations is a feeling that the United States, as shown in recent reports from Washington, is alive to the necessity of giving Japan some outlet, but not at the cost of China's integrity. Mr. Balfour goes to Washington with no mandate neither to scrap the Anglo-Japanese accord nor to strive to prolong it.

No inspired statement from the Government either in or out of Parliament has been made lately to indicate what the British attitude toward the alliance with Japan will be. From what the correspondent is able to ascertain, the official British view is that neither Japan nor Britain goes to Washington prejudiced to the alliance. On the contrary, it is asserted an understanding between the United States, Britain and Japan on the vital Pacific issues will automatically finish it.

If Japan, as it is thought, intends abandoning its forceful policy in China and Mongolia to build up her trade there by means of peaceful penetration and stimulation of a normal type of emigration, it is not yet clear what she means to do about the spheres which she acquired in recent years.

To reach any effective stage on the discussion of limitation of armaments the British Government believes, therefore, that it is necessary beforehand to find some formula on Pacific issues satisfactory to the three powers most vitally interested. As the First Sea Lord of the Admiralty explained in a statement printed last Christmas, Britain has adopted the one power, instead of the two-power naval standard, due to the Japan into such an agreement is another matter, and bound up with the whole question of satisfying Japanese aspirations in Eastern Asia.

To the United States as the convener of the conference, so it is felt here, falls the role of outlining the method of procedure, and that America will also act in the capacity of liaison officer between all the delegations, is expected. As it is seen here, all the powers go to Washington hoping sincerely to deliver the goods, which means in the case of the principal naval powers, going back home later with some understanding in their pockets which will mean dollars and cents in the pockets of their countrymen through curtailment of armaments.

Lady Minto Protests.

LONDON, Nov. 7.—Lady Minto has provoked somewhat extensive correspondence in her protest against the decision of the War Graves Commission against inclusion of the age of the fallen soldier in the official epitaph inscribed on the higher portion of each headstone erected by the Commission.

The official inscription merely records the man's regimental particulars, but a private inscription by relatives is permitted on the base of each headstone, limited to sixty-six letters, which may include the soldier's age. Lady Minto, among other submissions, urged that future generations should realize how the war produced generals under thirty, and privates over fifty. Most of the correspondents support her ladyship, including Lord Buckmaster.

The War Graves Commission is understood to be prepared to reconsider its decision if there is any spontaneous pressure of public opinion desiring this.

CATTLE MARKETS

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

TORONTO, Nov. 7.—Cattle prices remained steady at the Union Stock Yards last week, with the exception of heavy steers. The easier trade in heavier cattle was about the only outstanding incident in the week's activity, and was largely attributable to the shipment from the West and the light demand for export.

The stocker and feeder trade failed to maintain the improvement it has been showing. The shortage was paying around $5.50 per cwt. for good feeding steers, while farmers were not anxious to exceed $5, and demanded the best quality at that price.

Common cattle continue to form a large proportion of the offerings, and the trade in these classes is of a draggy nature. Choice butcher cattle were wanted, but few lots exceeded $6 per cwt., bulk of the best offerings selling between $5 and $5.75. Quality considered, prices on the whole were unchanged from those prevailing a week ago.

Hog prices were little changed during the week, the bulk of the fed and watered selects selling at $9, with $9.25 the top. Packers' bids did not exceed $9, while the advance was paid by outsiders. The range between f.o.b. and fed and watered prices was 50c per cwt.

Lamb prices showed a slight gain, with top sales at $7.75 and $8.50. A good demand continues for sheep, choice heavyweights selling at $4 and $4.50, and the heavy ones at $3 to $3.25. The offering of calves was light, but prices failed to show any change. Best veal offerings made a top of $12 per cwt. Heavy and grass calves, which had accumulated on the market, were cleaned up last week, as a result of the light receipts.

CHAPTER I.

The First Wayfarer and the Second Wayfarer Meet and Part on the Highway.

A solitary figure trudged along the narrow road that wound its serpentinous way through the humid, forbidding depths of the forest—a man who, though weary and footsore, lagged not in his swift, resolute advance. Night was coming on, and with it the no uncertain prospects of a storm.

He came to the "pike" and there was a signpost. A huge, crudely painted hand pointed to the left, and on what was intended to be the sleeve of a very stiff and unflinching arm these words were printed in scaly white: "Hart's Tavern. Food for Man and Beast. Also Gasoline. Established 1766. 1 Mile."

On the opposite side of the "pike," in the angle formed by a junction with the narrow mountain road, stood an humbler signpost, lettered so indistinctly that it deserved the compassion of all observers because of its humility. Swerving in his hurried passage, the tall stranger drew near this shrinking friend to the uncertain traveler, and was suddenly aware of another presence in the roadway.

A woman appeared, as if from nowhere, almost at his side. He drew back to let her pass. She stopped before the little signpost, and together they made out the faint directions.

To the right and up the mountain road Frogg's Corner lay four miles and a half away; Pitcairn was six miles back over the road which the man had traveled. Two miles and a half down the turnpike was Spanish Falls, a railway station, and four miles above the crossroads where the man and women stood peering through the darkness at the laconic signpost reposed the village of St. Elizabeth. Hart's Tavern was on the road to St. Elizabeth, and the man, with barely a glance at his fellow traveler, started briskly off in that direction.

He knew that these wild mountain storms moved swiftly; his chance of reaching the tavern ahead of the deluge was exceedingly slim. His long, powerful legs had carried him twenty or thirty paces before he came to a sudden halt.

What of this lone woman who traversed the highway? His first glimpse of her had been extremely casual—indeed, he had paid no attention to her at all, so eager was he to read the directions and be on his way.

She was standing quite still in front of the signpost, peering up the road toward Frogg's Corner—confronted by a steep climb that led into black and sinister timberlands above the narrow strip of pasture bordering the pike.

The fierce wind pinned her skirts to her slender body as she leaned against the gale, gripping her hat tightly with one hand and straining under the weight of the bag in the other. The ends of a veil whipped furiously about her head, and, even in the gathering darkness, he could see a strand or two of hair keeping them company.

Retracing his steps, he called out to her above the gale:

"Can I be of any assistance to you?"

She turned quickly. He saw that the veil was drawn tightly over her face.

"No, thank you," she replied. Her voice, despite a certain nervous note, was soft and clear and gentle—the voice and speech of a well-bred person who was young and resolute.

"Pardon me, but have you much farther to go? The storm will soon be upon us, and—surely you will not consider me presumptuous—I don't like the idea of your being caught out in—"

"What is to be done about it?" she inquired, resignedly. "I must go on. I can't wait here, you know, to be washed back to the place I started from."

He smiled. She had wit as well as determination.

"If I can be of the least assistance to you pray don't hesitate to command me. I am a sort of tramp, you might say, and I travel as well by night as I do by day—so don't feel that you are putting me to any inconvenience. Are you by any chance bound for Hart's Tavern? If so, I will be glad to lag behind and carry your bag."

"You are very good, but I am not bound for Hart's Tavern, wherever that may be. Thank you, just the same. You appear to be an uncommonly genteel tramp, and it isn't because I am afraid you might make off with my belongings." She added the last by way of apology.

He smiled—and then frowned as he cast an uneasy look at the black clouds now rolling ominously up over the mountain ridge.

"By Jove, we're going to catch it good and hard," he exclaimed. "Better take my advice. These storms are terrible. I know, for I've encountered half a dozen of them in the past week. They fairly tear one to pieces. You are a stranger in these parts?"

"Yes. The railway station is a few miles below here. I have walked all the way. There was no one to meet me. You are a stranger also, so it is useless to inquire if you know whether this road leads to Green Fancy."

"Green Fancy? Sounds attractive. I'm sorry I can't enlighten you." He

"It is on the road to Frogg's Corner," she explained nervously. "A mile and a half, so I am told. It isn't on the signpost. It is a house, not a village. Thank you for your kindness. And I am not at all frightened," she added, raising her voice slightly.

"But you are," he cried. "You're scared half out of your wits. You can't fool me. I'd be scared myself at the thought of venturing into those woods up yonder."

"Well, then, I am frightened," she confessed plaintively. "Almost out of my boots."

"That settles it," he said flatly. "You shall not undertake it."

"Oh, but I must. I am expected. It is import—"

"If you are expected why didn't someone meet you at the station? Seems to me—"

"Hark! Do you hear—doesn't that sound like an automobile—ah!" The hoarse honk of an automobile horn rose above the howling wind and an instant later two faint lights came rushing toward them around a bend in the mountain road. "Better late than never," she cried, her voice vibrant once more.

He grasped her arm and jerked her out of the path of the oncoming machine, whose driver was sending it along at a mad rate, regardless of ruts and stones and curves. The car careened as it swung into the pike, skidded alarmingly, and then the brakes were jammed down. Attended by a vast grinding of gears and wheels, the rattling old car came to a stop fifty feet or more beyond them.

"I'd sooner walk than take my chances in an antediluvian rattletrap like that," said the tall wayfarer, bending quite close to her ear. "It will fall to pieces before you—"

But she was running down the road toward the car, calling out sharply to the driver. He stooped over and took up the traveling bag she had dropped in her haste and excitement. It was heavy, amazingly heavy.

"I shouldn't like to carry that a mile and a half," he said to himself.

The voice of the belated driver came to his ears on the swift wind. It was high-pitched and unintelligibly apologetic. He could not hear what she was saying to him, but there wasn't much doubt as to the nature of her remarks. She was roundly upbraiding him.

Urged to action by thoughts of his own plight he hurried to her side and said:

"Excuse me, please. You dropped something. Shall I put it up in front or in the tonneau?"

The whimsical note in his voice brought a quick, responsive laugh from her lips.

"Thank you so much. I am frightfully careless with my valuables. Would you mind putting it in behind? Thanks!" Her tone altered completely as she ordered the man to turn the car around—"And be quick about it," she added.

The first drops of rain pelted down from the now thoroughly black dome above them, striking in the road with the sharpness of pebbles.

"Lucky it's a limousine," said the tall traveler. "Better hop in. We'll be getting it hard in a second or two."

"You must let me take you on to the Tavern in the car," she said. "Turn about is fair play. I cannot allow you to—"

"Never mind about me," he broke in cheerily. He had been wondering if she would make the offer, and he felt better now that she had gone so. . . accustomed to roughing it. I don't mind a soaking. I've had hundred of 'em."

"Just the same you shall not have one tonight," she announced firmly. "Get in behind. I shall sit with the driver."

Mr. Bacon had told him that this rattling, dilapidated automobile—ten years old, at the very least, he would have sworn—was capable of covering the mile in less than two minutes he would have laughed in his face. Almost before he realized that they were on the way up the straight, dark road the lights in the windows of Hart's Tavern came into view. Once more the bounding, swaying car came to a stop under brakes, and he was relaxing after the strain of the most hair-raising ride he had ever experienced.

Not a word had been spoken during the trip. The front windows were lowered. The driver—an old, hatchet-faced man—had uttered a single word just before throwing in the clutch at the crossroads in response to the young woman's crisp command to drive to Hart's Tavern. That word was uttered under his breath and it is not necessary to repeat it here.

The wayfarer lost no time in climbing out of the car. As he leaped to the ground and raised his arm to help her out a second look at the automobile—a look of mingled wonder and respect. It was an old-fashioned, high-powered car, capable, despite its antiquity, of astonishing speed in any sort of going.

"For heaven's sake," he began, shouting to her above the roar of the wind and rain, "don't let him drive like that ever! Those—"

"You're getting wet," she cried out, a thrill in her voice. "Good night—and thank you!"

"Look out!" grasped the unpleasant fact, and jammed the clutch. The man in the road jumped hastily to one side as the car shot backward with a jerk, curved sharply, stopped for the fraction of a second, and then bounded forward again, headed for the crossroads.

"Thanks!" shouted the late passenger after the receding tail light, and dashed up the steps to the porch that was the full length of Hart's Tavern.

A huge old-fashioned lantern hung above the portal, creaking and straining in the wind, dragging at its stout supports and threatening every instant to break loose and go frolicking away with the storm.

He lifted the latch and, being a tall man, involuntarily stooped as he passed through the door, a needless precaution, for gaunt, gigantic mountaineers had entered there before him and without bending their arrogant heads.

CHAPTER II.

The First Wayfarer Lays His Pack Aside and Falls in With Friends

The little hall in which he found himself was the "office" through which all men must pass who come as guests to Hart's Tavern. A steep, angular staircase took up one end of the room. Set in beneath its upper turn was the counter over which the business of the house was transacted, and behind this a man was engaged in the peaceful occupation of smoking a corncob pipe.

An open door to the right of the stairway gave entrance to a room from which came the sound of a deep, sonorous voice employed in what turned out to be a conversational solo. To the left another door led to what was evidently the dining room. The glance that the stranger sent in that direction revealed two or three tables covered with white cloths.

"Can you put me up for the night?" he inquired, advancing to the counter.

"You look like a feller who'd want a room with bath," drawled the man behind the counter, surveying the applicant from head to foot. "Which we ain't got," he added.

"I'll be satisfied to have a room with a bed," said the other.

"Sign here," was the laconic response.

"Can I have supper?"

"Food for man and beast," said the other patiently. He slapped his palm upon a cracked call bell and then looked at the fresh name on the page. "Thomas K. Barnes, New York," he read aloud. He eyed the newcomer once more. "My name is Jones—Putnam Jones. I run this place. My father an' grandfather run it before me. Glad to meet you, Mr. Barnes. We used to have a hostler here named Barnes. What's your idear for footin' it this time o' the year?"

"I do something like this every spring. A month or six weeks of it puts me in fine shape for a vacation later on," supplied Mr. Barnes whimsically.

Mr. Jones allowed a grin to steal over his seamed face. He reinserted the corncob pipe and took a couple of puffs at it.

"I never been to New York, but it must be a heavenly place for a vacation, if a feller c'n judge by what some of my present boarders have to say about it. It's a sort of play actor's paradise, ain't it?"

"It is paradise to every actor who happens to be on the road, Mr. Jones," said Barnes, slipping his big pack from his shoulders and letting it slide to the floor.

"Hear that feller in the taproom talkin'? Well, he is one of the leading actors in New York—in the world, for that matter. He's been talkin' about Broadway for nearly a week now, steady."

"May I inquire what he is doing up here in the wilds?"

"At present he ain't doing anything except talk. Last week he was treddin' the boards, as he puts it himself. Busted. Up the line. Showed last Saturday night in Hornville, eighteen mile north of here, and immegiately after the performance him and his whole troupe started to walk back to New York, a good four hundred mile. They started out the back way of the opery house and nobody missed 'em till next mornin' except the sheriff, and he didn't miss 'em till they'd got over the county line. Walkin' for ballfeck. Four of 'em are still stoppin' here just because I ain't got the heart to turn 'em out ner the spare money to buy 'em tickets to New York. Here comes one of 'em now. Mr. Dillingford, will you show this gentleman to room eleven and carry his baggage up fer him? And maybe he'll want a pitcher of warm water to wash and shave in." He turned to the new guest and smiled apologetically. "We're a little short o' help just now, Mr. Barnes, and Mr. Dillingford has kindly consented to—"

"My word!" gasped Mr. Dillingford, staring at the register. "Someone from little old New York? My word, sir, you— Won't you have a—er—little something to drink with me before you—"

"He wants something to eat," interrupted Mr. Jones sharply. "Tell Mr. Bacon to step up to his room and take the order."

"All right, old chap—nothing easier," said Mr. Dillingford genially. "Just climb up the elevator, Mr. Barnes. We do this to get up an appetite. When did you leave New York?"

Taking up a lighted kerosene lamp and the heavy pack, Mr. Clarence Dillingford led the way up the stairs. He was a chubby individual of indefinite age. At a glance you would have said he was under twenty-one; a second look would have convinced you that he was nearer forty-one.

Depositing Barnes' pack on a chair in the little bedroom at the end of the hallway upstairs he turned the guest with a perfectly unabashed grin.

"I'm not doing this to oblige old man Jones, you know. I won't attempt to deceive you. I'm working out a daily board bill. Chuck three times a week and I'm said to sleep in—that's what I'm doing it for, so don't get it into your head that I applied for the job. Let me look at you. I want to get a good square peep at a man who has the means to go somewhere and yet is good enough to come to this gosh-awful place of his own free will and accord. Darn it, you look intelligent. I don't get you at all. What's the matter? Are you a fugitive from justice?"

Barnes laughed aloud. There was no withstanding the fellow's sprightly impudence.

"I happen to enjoy walking," said he.

"If I enjoyed it as much as you do I'd be limping into Harlem by this time," said Mr. Dillingford sadly. "But you see I'm an actor. I'm too proud to walk—"

The cracked bell on the office desk interrupted him, somewhat peremptorily. Mr. Dillingford's face assumed an expression of profound dignity. He lowered his voice as he gave vent to the following:

"That man Jones is the meanest human being God ever let— Yes, sir, coming, sir!" He started for the open door with surprising alacrity.

Barnes surveyed the little bedchamber. It was just what he had expected it would be. The walls were covered with a garish paper selected by one who had an eye but a taste for color—bright pink flowers that looked more or less like chunks of a shattered watermelon split promiscuously over a background of pearl gray. The bedstead, bureau and washstand were offensively modern. Everything was as clean as a pin, however, and the bed looked comfortable. He stepped to the small, many-paned window and looked out into the night. The storm was at its height. In all his life he never had heard such a clatter of rain, nor a wind that shrieked so appallingly.

His thoughts went quite naturally to the woman who was out there in the thick of it. He wondered how she was faring and lamented that she was not in his place now and he in hers. What was she doing up in this God-forsaken country and what was the name of the place she was bound for? Green Fancy! What an odd name for a house! And what sort of house—

His reflections were interrupted by the return of Mr. Dillingford, who carried a huge pewter pitcher from which steam arose in volume. At his heels strode a tall, cadaverous person in a checked suit.

Never had Barnes seen anything quite so overpowering in the way of a suit. Joseph's coat of many colors was no longer a vision of childhood. It was a reality. The checks were an inch square and each cube had a narrow border of azure blue. The general tone was a dirty gray, due no doubt to age and a constitution that would not allow it to outlive its usefulness.

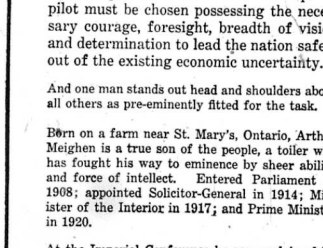
"Meet Mr. Bacon, Mr. Barnes," introduced Mr. Dillingford, going to the needless exertion of indicating Mr. Bacon with a generous sweep of his free hand. "Our heavy leads. Mr. Montague Bacon, also of New York."

"Ham and eggs, pork tenderloin, country sausage, rump steak and spring chicken," said Mr. Bacon in a cavernous voice, getting it over with while the list was fresh in his memory. "Fried and boiled potatoes, beans, succotash, onions, stewed tomatoes and—er—just a moment, please. Fried and boiled potatoes, beans—"

"Ham and eggs, potatoes and a cup or two of coffee," said Barnes, suppressing a desire to laugh.

"And apple pie," concluded the waiter triumphantly. "I knew I'd get it if you gave me time. As you may have observed, my dear sir, I am not what you would call an experienced waiter. As a matter of fact, I—"

The bell downstairs rang violently.



The Man of the Hour

In this hour of Canada's most acute national crisis, the country's greatest need is leadership—not class leadership, not sectional leadership, but NATIONAL leadership. A pilot must be chosen possessing the necessary courage, foresight, breadth of vision and determination to lead the nation safely out of the existing economic uncertainty.

And one man stands out head and shoulders above all others as pre-eminently fitted for the task.

Born on a farm near St. Mary's, Ontario, Arthur Meighen is a true son of the people, a toiler who has fought his way to eminence by sheer ability and force of intellect. Entered Parliament in 1908; appointed Solicitor-General in 1914; Minister of the Interior in 1917; and Prime Minister in 1920.

At the Imperial Conference he was acclaimed by the Press of Great Britain as a great statesman, as a strong, virile, vigorous personality—alert in mind, keen and far-seeing in judgment, and with a fearless determination to stand for the right.

Professor A. D. Skelton, of Queen's University, and biographer of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, wrote of the present Prime Minister:—"He has already given proof of high administrative capacity. His personal integrity is beyond question."

Of himself, Arthur Meighen said to his constituents the other day:—"You know where I stood on this issue in 1908, in 1911, and as in 1911 I stand to-day."

Children Cry for Fletcher's

CASTORIA

Fletcher's Castoria is strictly a remedy for Infants and Children. Foods are specially prepared for babies. A baby's medicine is even more essential for Baby. Remedies primarily prepared for grown-ups are not interchangeable. It was the need of a remedy for the common ailments of Infants and Children that brought Castoria before the public after years of research, and no claim has been made for it that its use for over 30 years has not proven.

What is CASTORIA?

Castoria is a harmless substitute for Castor Oil, Paregoric, Drops and Soothing Syrups. It is pleasant. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other narcotic substance. Its age is its guarantee. For more than thirty years it has been in constant use for the relief of Constipation, Flatulency, Wind Colic and Diarrhoea; allaying Feverishness arising therefrom, and by regulating the Stomach and Bowels, aids the assimilation of Food; giving healthy and natural sleep. THE CENTAUR COMPANY, NEW YORK CITY

Mr. Bacon departed in great haste.

While the traveler performed his ablutions Mr. Dillingford, for the moment disengaged, sat upon the edge of the bed and enjoyed himself. He talked.

"We were nine at the start," said he pensively. "Gradually we were reduced to seven, not including the manager. Two of 'em escaped before the smash. The low comedian and character old woman. Joe Buckley and his wife. That left the old man—I mean Mr. Rushcroft, the star—Lyndon Rushcroft, you know—myself and Bacon, Tommy Gray, Miss Rushcroft, Miss Hughes and a woman named Bradley, seven of us. The woman named Bradley said her mother was dying in Buffalo, so the rest of us scraped together all the money we had—nine dollars and sixty cents—and did the right thing by her. Actors are always doing darn-fool things like that, Mr. Barnes. And what do you suppose she did? She took that money and bought two tickets to Albany, one for herself and another for the manager of the company—the lowest, meanest onery-lest white man that ever— But I am crabbing the old man's part. You ought to her what he has to say about Mr. Manager. He can use words I never even heard of before. So that leaves just the four of us here, working off the two days' board bill of Bradley and the manager, Rushcroft's tragedy 'Sun and Sky' the same time keeping our own slate clean. Miss Thackeray will no doubt make up your bed in the morning. She is temporarily a chambermaid. Cracking fine girl, too. Are you ready? I'll lead you to the dining room. Or would you prefer a little appetizer beforehand? The taproom is right on the way. You mustn't call it the bar. Everybody in that little graveyard town down the r id would turn over completely if you did. Hallowed tradition, you know."

"I don't mind having a cocktail. Will you join me?"

"As a matter of fact, I'm expected to," confessed Mr. Dillingford. "We've been drawing quite a bit of custom to the taproom. The rubes like to sit around and listen to conversation about Broadway and Bunker Hill and Old Point Comfort and other places, and then go home and tell the neighbors that they know quite a number of stage people. Human nature, I guess. Listen! Hear that? Rushcroft reciting 'Gunga Din.' You can't hear the thunder for the noise he's making."

The descended the stairs and entered the taproom, where a dozen men were seated around the tables, all of them with pewter mugs in front of them. Standing at the top table—that is to say, the one farthest removed from the door and commanding the attention of every creature in the room—was the imposing figure of Lyndon Rushcroft. He was reciting, in a sonorous voice and with tremendous fervor, the famous Kipling poem. A genial smile wiped the tragic expression from his face. He advanced upon Barnes and the beaming Mr. Dillingford, his hand extended.

"My dear fellow," he exclaimed resoundingly, "how are you?" Cordiality boomed in his voice. "I heard you had arrived. Welcome—thricefold welcome!" He neglected to say that Mr. Montague Bacon, in passing by five minutes before, had leaned over and whispered behind his hand:

"Fellow upstairs from New York, Mr. Rushcroft—fellow named Barnes. Quite a swell, believe me."

It was a well-placed tip, for Mr. Rushcroft had been telling the natives for days that he knew everybody worth knowing in New York.

Barnes was momentarily taken aback. Then he rose to the spirit of the occasion.

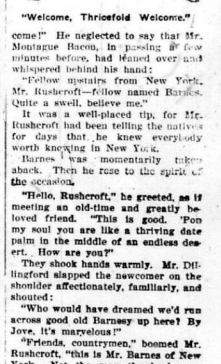
"Hello, Rushcroft," he greeted, as if meeting an old-time and greatly beloved friend. "This is good. From my soul you are like a thriving date palm in the middle of an endless desert. How are you?"

They shook hands warmly. Mr. Dillingford slipped the newcomer on the shoulder affectionately, familiarly, and shouted:

"Who would have dreamed we'd run across good old Barnesy up here? By Jove, it's marvelous!"

"Friends, countrymen," boomed Mr. Rushcroft, "this is Mr. Barnes of New York. Not the man the book was written about but one of the best fellows God ever put into this little world of ours. I do not recall your names, gentlemen, or I would introduce each of you separately and divisibly."

Lyndon Rushcroft was a tall, saggy man of fifty. Despite his determined erectness he was inclined to sag from the shoulders down. His head, huge and gray, appeared to be much too ponderous for his yielding body, and yet he carried it manfully, even theatrically. The lines in his dark, seasoned face were like furrows; his nose was large and somewhat bulbous, his mouth wide and grim. Thick, black eyebrows shaded a pair of eyes in which white was no longer apparent—it had given way to a permanent red. A two-days' stubble covered his chin and cheeks. Altogether he was a singular complication of one's idea of the old-time actor.



"Welcome, Thricefold Welcome."

DEAR PEOPLE,—

We purpose taking for our text this period. "Sell Your Hammer and Buy a Horn." Our past lectures, besides being to us very profitable, have proved also to have annoyed one or two persons, namely, bums and stool pigeons. So accept our apologies if we seem to be blowing a little, and try us out and we will prove our words. We intend during the coming months to do a little profit sharing among our friends. Whilst visiting in Toronto and West it was our good fortune to become acquainted with leather dealers of a much larger standing than some of our competitors, and also to buy in markets more reasonable. By buying in large quantities we were able to purchase the best oak tanned leather at 17c. below ordinary market price. So as an inducement for you to try out this real good quality we intend to make a big reduction in the price of our shoe repairs, so take note of the following list and give us a trial to convince you we have the real goods.

Barriers Against Emigrants on St. Clair River.

SARNIA, Ont., Nov. 7. — Claiming that illegal attempts are being made to have many Europeans legally enter the United States, American immigration officers put up barriers on the St. Clair river last week with the result that all Sarnians crossing into the United States were subjected to a probe.

According to word received from the Washington Federal Department, Major E. S. Peitit, of the immigration staff, states that his department heads announce they are stopping attempts to have immigrants from Europe at Sarnia and other ports along the St. Clair river smuggled over the border. The United States Department chiefs say that they have already discovered that Europeans have been smuggled into the United States from this side of the river and the probe is already under way as a result of this.

November the Month for Furs

Now is the Time to Buy---Fur Prices are Advancing.

We have just completed a tour of inspection and investigation for the purpose of getting first hand information regarding conditions of the Canadian fur markets.

In talking to "fur manufacturers" and owners of "fur farms" we find that there is a huge shortage of all the fashionable and desirable skins. This condition is brought about by the enormous demand of the public generally for furs. The fur catch last Spring was decidedly limited, consequently the raw furs for future use this season will not only be scarce, but prohibitive in price.

Hence we repeat—if you want furs—buy now while you can get assortments of furs to choose from, and at prices which in many, many instances are lower than present manufacturing costs.

To-day in stock we have a fine selected range of Ladies' Hudson Seal Coats, Muskrat Jackets ; Coats made from Chapelle Dyed French Seal, Genet and Russian Pony.

These are garments that any woman might well be pleased to wear, as they reveal the newest styles, are made from the best of pelts, while on every coat we guarantee the workmanship and the value.

Also procurable are Men's Coats in Sitka Beaver, Kalgan Buffalo and Coon.

We would appreciate the opportunity of discussing these garments with you.
